It was 1954. The world was suffering from unrequited love, a big post-war baby boom and an insatiable craving for sweet solace.

In the heart of Little Italy, sharing a cold water flat, lived Serendipity 3. Princes under frog suits, they waited, lips pursed, for the kiss that would reveal their true selves. But it took a word to open the magic door.

The word Serendipity: the art of finding the pleasantly unexpected by chance or sagacity. Invented by eighteenth century wordsmith, Sir Horace Walpole, it evoked the ancient legend of the three princes of the island no longer known as Serendip.

"Hey," said the boys, "that's a good name for a place of our own!" So the Serendipity 3 pooled their entire fortune of three hundred dollars and staked a claim to a tiny principality in the basement of a tenement on East Fifty-Eighth Street.

It was New York's first coffee house boutique. The first Tiffany lampshaded meeting place since the days of Diamond Jim Brady. Serendipity had come into the world four tables, sixteen chairs and a towering espresso machine strong. In no time, patrons outnumbered the facilities. Nightly the line formed, stretching around the block and under the old Third Avenue El.

The Serendipity 3 lost no time learning how to cook, design, whip and turn on the frozen hots. They rolled in the loot and rolled around the corner to the cozy brownstone on Serendipity Street. The kitchen buzzed to all hours producing never before seen extravaganzas. The entire Silk Stocking community squeezed into its tightest jeans and queued up.

Before he was anyone, Andy Warhol declared it his favorite sweet shop, and paid his chits in drawings. James Beard dislodged his molars tasting and testing in the Serendipity kitchen. Vogue Editors planned their issues at old-fashioned kitchen tables, deciding tomorrow's ins and outs. Hundred-dollar-an-hour models nibbled on watercress while movie stars left forkprints in whipped cream mountains.

In 2008 Serendipity decided to spread it's wings to venture out of New York for the first time and landed here at The Boca Raton Resort and Club. We know that the Princes would be proud and so are we.....
